Who is this book for?

If you are a woman experiencing abuse or if you have been abused, this book is intended to help you. A lot of the information is also relevant to men and non-binary people who have experienced abuse.

Everyone wants respectful and caring relationships with their intimate partners, and lives for themselves and their children that are safe and free of abuse. It can be difficult and frightening to recognize and admit that you are being abused, but it is essential so that you can make changes to keep yourself and your children safe.

Many couples want to stay together, but a loving relationship takes commitment and work from both partners. Relationships are not always easy, but everyone has the potential to change, and to have respectful relationships free of violence.

We hope this book will help you to understand abuse and learn about the resources and supports that are available in Nova Scotia. These supports aim to help survivors of abuse understand their options more fully, and to assist couples in achieving loving, abuse-free relationships. This book offers steps that you can take to address abuse in a relationship.

If you are a friend, family member, service provider, or other support person, reading this book can also be helpful for you so that you can better understand how to help someone who has experienced abuse.

A lot of the information is also relevant to men and non-binary people who have experienced abuse.

RESOURCES

If you have questions about the information in this book, or if you or someone you know needs help and support, you can call the transition house in your area. You can also call a transition house if you just want to talk. The Directory at the end of this book has a complete list of transition houses with contact information.

If you are a woman who has experienced abuse, there are people who can help you. You can call a transition house anytime to get information, for support and help with safety planning, or for help from a trained counselor. These services are available to you even if you do not stay in the transition house.

When you call a transition house, you do not have to give your name. If you are deaf, hard of hearing, or need a translator, interpretation may be available.

Understanding Abuse

Abuse is also called family violence,
domestic violence,
or intimate partner violence.

What is abuse?

Abuse takes many forms. Abuse can be emotional, psychological, social, sexual, financial, and/or physical. A number of these kinds of abuse can occur at the same time. Throughout this book we will be using the term 'abuse'.

Domestic violence is deliberate and purposeful violence, abuse, and intimidation perpetrated by one person against another in an intimate relationship. It occurs between two persons where one exercises power over the other, causing fear, physical, and/or psychological harm. It may be a single act or a series of acts forming a pattern of abuse. Domestic violence can occur in any relationship, however, women are primarily the victims and men are primarily the perpetrators. Children and young people may experience harm by being exposed to violence in adult relationships, being the direct victims of violence, or a combination of the two.

In an abusive relationship there may be:

Psychological or emotional abuse, such as:

- intimidation and harassment
- threats to harm a person, a pet, or property
- intentionally damaging property
- hurting or killing pets
- keeping a person from having control over their own finances or from making their own decisions
- following or stalking a person, or
- online stalking and harassment.

Verbal abuse, such as:

- yelling and screaming
- name-calling
- making threats, or
- making hurtful criticisms.

Physical abuse, such as:

- pushing
- hitting
- punching
- choking
- kicking
- biting
- forced confinement (not letting someone leave)
- keeping someone from having the necessities of life (for example, food), or
- trying to physically abuse someone.

Sexual abuse, such as:

- unwanted sexual touching
- forcing someone to have sex
- unwanted violence during sex, such as choking a person without their consent, or
- trying to sexually abuse someone.

LEGAL INFO

Some forms of abuse are criminal offences in the Criminal Code, including:

- physical assault, such as hitting, punching, strangling, etc.
- sexual assault
- threats to harm or to kill
- forcibly withholding food and medical treatment
- taking another person's source of income through fraud or threats
- stalking or criminal harassment (creating fear by repeatedly following, communicating, or attempting to communicate with a person)
- forced labour
- forced prostitution (human trafficking)

Healthy relationships

A healthy relationship involves respect and care from both partners.

In a healthy relationship, neither partner should be afraid of the other partner. A healthy relationship is non-violent and involves equality between partners.

We all deserve healthy relationships with our partners.

Negotiation and Fairness
Non-threatening Behaviour
Economic Partnership
Respect
Trust and Support
Shared Responsibility
Responsible Parenting
Honesty and Accountability

In a healthy relationship there is:

Negotiation and Fairness

This means that both partners:

- seek mutually satisfying resolutions to conflict
- accept change
- are willing and open to compromise

Non-threatening Behaviour

This means that both partners:

- talk and act in a way that allows both of them to feel safe and comfortable expressing themselves

Economic Partnership

This means that both partners:

- make money decisions together
- benefit from financial arrangements

Respect

This means that both partners:

- listen to each other openly and without judging
- are emotionally supportive and understanding
- value the other's opinions

Trust and Support

This means that both partners:

- support each other's goals in life
- respect each other's right to their own feelings, friends, activities, and opinions

Shared Responsibility

This means that both partners:

- mutually agree on a fair distribution of work
- make family decisions together

Responsible Parenting

This means that both partners:

- share parental responsibilities
- provide a positive, non-violent role model for the children

Honesty and Accountability

This means that both partners:

- accept responsibility
- take responsibility for past use of violence
- admit being wrong
- communicate openly and truthfully

Is it abuse?

It is rare for a couple not to have an occasional argument. However, sometimes you begin to be afraid of your partner and your behaviour changes because of this fear.

The line between normal conflict and abuse is not always clear. It is not easy for most of us to recognize and accept that we are being abused.

Some people struggle to identify their situation as abusive. You may feel that your partner loves you, because partners who abuse often do express love toward the people they hurt. Remember that anyone can choose not to abuse, and that there are other ways to behave toward the people we love. Everyone has to take responsibility for their own behaviour.

You may feel sorry for your partner, or hope you can change your partner. Perhaps your partner is insecure, has problems, or was abused. There is no excuse for abuse. We all have to learn to feel good about ourselves without putting others down. It doesn't mean you don't love your partner if you want your partner to change and stop abusing.

Regardless of why someone is abusive, their behaviour cannot be justified.
Abuse is wrong.

LEGAL INFO

It is very important to remember that abuse is never acceptable, and physical and sexual abuse are crimes under Canadian law.

It could be abuse if ...

Your partner ...

- gets jealous when others are around
- destroys, or threatens to destroy, your possessions
- uses put-downs, name-calling, or threats
- makes you choose between your friends/family and your partner
- blames you when things go wrong
- pushes you
- hits you
- threatens to take your children
- hits the walls
- yells at you
- harms, or threatens to harm, your pet
- threatens to harm your family members or friends
- threatens suicide or self-harm

If you feel you have to ...

- ask permission to spend money or go out
- take the blame when things go wrong
- "make things right" just for your partner
- do what your partner wants
- make excuses for your partner's behavior

If you feel ...

- afraid to make decisions for fear of your partner's reaction or anger
- isolated from friends, family, and activities
- afraid to express your own opinions or say "no"
- afraid to leave your partner

If the lists above sound familiar to you, you may be experiencing abuse.

Why does abuse happen?

There are many other complex reasons why a partner abuses. A partner may abuse because they:

- learned this behaviour in their own family
- feel it is acceptable for men to control women
- believe abuse is a way to have power
- have low self-esteem/are insecure
- are unemployed or live in poverty
- think that there are few, if any, consequences to their violent acts
- have a mental illness or suffer from post-traumatic stress disorder, or
- abuse alcohol or drugs

Many factors can influence why people choose to be violent. For example, traditional gender roles may lead family members to believe the man is the legal head of the household and should control the family. There is no easy answer to why abuse happens.

Some men are brought up to believe that it is okay to use force to control their female partners or solve family problems.

Some women report feeling like they are being treated like property, belonging first to a father or other male relative and later to a husband.

Traditional gender roles

can also influence the dynamics of abuse in same-gender relationships and relationships in which one or more of the partners are transgender. LGBTQ (lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and queer) women, for example, may be shamed by their partners for being too feminine or too masculine, for not “passing” according to socially accepted gender norms, for being out, for not being out, or a number of other reasons. See page 26 for more discussion about how domestic abuse can impact LGBTQ partners.

Many of us grew up in families where there was a lot of conflict or where violence was common. Violence is on television, in movies, in video games, in advertisements, and online. It is often considered normal to be dominant and even to be violent, especially for men.

Social expectations can play a role in abuse. Both men and women may feel pressured to act out traditional gender roles. Social expectations can lead people to believe that it is acceptable for men to be 'tough' and abusive, and for women to be peacekeepers who make sure everyone in the home is happy. These gender roles can make men feel pressured to show their masculinity through controlling their female partners.

Gender roles can also make it seem that a power imbalance in relationships is normal and acceptable. The pressures of traditional gender roles often lead women to be blamed if their home is not harmonious, even if their partner is choosing to abuse. These pressures can also lead to women blaming themselves.

People who abuse often believe that ending the abuse is not their responsibility. They often blame the victim. They might say, "she made me" or "she drove me to it".

Abusive partners sometimes confuse abusive behaviour with expressing anger. Anger is an emotion that everyone experiences, and it can be expressed in healthy ways. Abuse is never acceptable.

Sometimes actions are in self-defense or an immediate response to being abused. If you respond to abuse by yelling, putting your partner down, slapping, or using aggressive behavior, it does not in any way excuse your partner's abusive behavior.

No one has the right to abuse others.

Is there a pattern to abuse?

In an abusive relationship, your partner might only be abusive on a rare occasion, or might be abusive to you only once. Other abusive partners are abusive many times during the relationship. Abuse and violence can start early in some relationships. In other relationships, the abuse may start later—sometimes during pregnancy. Violence and abuse may be used to maintain power and control over you. You may notice that there is a pattern to this behaviour.

It could look like this:

- Tension and anger start to build up. Sometimes there is an argument between you and your partner.
- Your partner physically abuses you or makes threats about becoming violent.
- Then there is a cool-down, make-up, or calm stage. Your partner may apologize and promise that it will never happen again. Your partner may reinforce these statements with “quick fixes” such as buying you gifts, dinner, or flowers. Often these actions are focused on making the person who abused feel better rather than trying to make you feel better.

Alternatively, some abusive partners begin to take responsibility and engage in long-term solutions such as seeking help from family, friends, or counselors.

If a partner engages in “quick fixes” the changes are often temporary. In some cases, the tension builds up again, and the abuse starts over.

Over time the abuse may increase in intensity. Even if your abusive partner does take responsibility through engaging in long-term change, changes may take time. Sometimes the abuse happens again in spite of the progress your partner has made. You have to decide for yourself if you want to continue to work on, or leave, your relationship.

There is a pattern to abuse...

Tension and anger

Abuse

...but you can step out of the cycle.

The effects of abuse

People who are abused often live with constant fear, worry, guilt, and self-blame. If you have experienced abuse from your partner, you may:

- begin to feel worthless, helpless, or ashamed
- feel like a failure
- feel isolated and degraded.

The effects of emotional or psychological abuse cannot be seen, but can be just as harmful as physical abuse. If you have experienced abuse of any kind, you may feel that no one could ever love you. You may feel stupid, ugly, and alone. You may begin to lose your self-respect. You may begin to use alcohol or drugs to escape.

You may feel like the hardest thing is feeling the loss of:

- your self-respect
- respect for your partner
- someone to be with
- a sense of hope
- happiness
- love
- companionship
- the feeling of safety that a relationship can provide
- family and friends
- independence
- your future goals and dreams
- laughter and joy
- your own identity
- freedom
- the ability to make decisions

RESOURCES

Even if you are not ready to make changes, sometimes it helps to talk. Transition houses are there to offer this support. Call 1 855 225 0220, or your local transition house (women's shelter), if you want to just talk.

For information about children and abuse, see page 105 of this book.

Challenges to accessing support

The following sections are written about women who have experienced abuse. This is because of the reality that women are disproportionately affected by domestic abuse. However, many of the following points may be equally valid for men and non-binary people (people who don't identify with the gender binary) as well.

Women who have experienced abuse may have different experiences. Their stories may not be same, but there are often similarities. Many women feel isolated and alone. They may feel responsible for their partner's abuse and emotional state. Sometimes women blame themselves for the abuse.

Women who have experienced abuse may keep the abuse a secret because they fear that if they tell anyone they will:

- break up their family
- lose their children
- lose their support and social networks, friends, family and community
- bring dishonour and shame to the family
- have to live in poverty
- make their partner angry and/or retaliate.

Women from many diverse and different backgrounds may be abused.

Women who experience abuse may:

- have different levels of education and income
- be different ages
- have different abilities
- have different sexual orientations and gender identities
- be from different spiritual groups, cultures, or races.

If you have experienced abuse, you can always call a Transition House hotline and just talk: 1 855 225 0220

SAFETY

Women from different racial or cultural groups, immigrant and migrant women, lesbian and queer women, bisexual women, transgender women, women living in poverty, and women who are disabled often face additional challenges in leaving abuse. Perhaps a woman's faith or tradition says she must stay at home with her family, even if she is being abused.

Women may have had bad experiences with the law, the medical profession, the justice system, or government agencies. Language barriers, racism, homophobia, transphobia, discrimination, fear of being deported, isolation, and disbelief are just a few of the additional barriers to reporting and dealing with abuse.

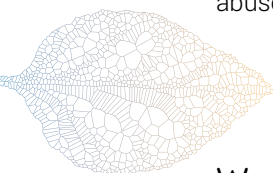

Women from different backgrounds and identity groups are impacted by abuse differently. It is important to recognize how factors such as race, class, sexual orientation, and ability can make leaving abuse and finding support more difficult.

Women Living in Poverty

Women living in poverty are more vulnerable to abuse and may face additional challenges in leaving abuse. For example, women living in poverty may be reluctant to leave an abusive partner because they feel they do not have the resources to live on their own. If they have children, they may also have concerns about being able to support their children without the abusive partner's income.

Sometimes women living in poverty have more than one job to make ends meet. This can make accessing support services difficult. For example, getting time off to see a lawyer or support person may be a challenge. Sometimes not having money for transportation to support agencies can also be a barrier.

Poverty can make relationships difficult because there are pressures on both partners to get by on limited resources. Though there is never an excuse for abuse, poverty can create emotional and psychological stress that can fuel abuse and make it worse.

Women in Rural Communities

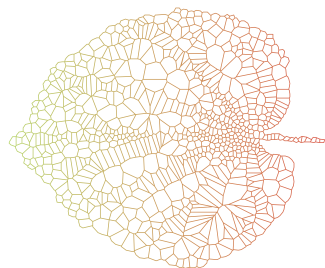

Women living in rural communities may also face barriers in leaving abuse and finding support. Rural women often do not tell anyone about the abuse they are suffering because it can be hard to stay anonymous in a small community.

In a small community, there may also be fewer support services for women. They may need to seek support outside their community, which can be difficult if there are no reliable and affordable transportation services in the area.

RESOURCES

To find support and assistance in your area, see the resources starting on page 125 of this book.

If they leave their community, rural women risk being isolated from the support of friends, neighbours, and family. They may also have to remove their children from their school, their grandparents and other family members, and their community.

Women with Disabilities

Women who have physical and intellectual disabilities are often more vulnerable to abuse than other women. Women with disabilities may also encounter a number of obstacles in leaving abuse and trying to access support services.

A woman with a disability may find that her abusive partner uses her disability in order to be abusive. For example, her abusive partner may threaten to destroy assistive devices or make other threats to stop her from leaving. Her partner may make her feel worthless or that the abuse is her fault. She could also feel that she would be losing an essential support person by leaving her abusive partner.

Women with disabilities may have difficulty explaining the dynamics of abuse to police and service providers. They may also encounter physical obstacles when trying to access services (for example, if a service she needs is not wheelchair accessible).

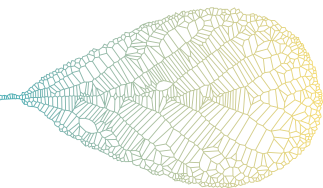

African Nova Scotian Women

African Nova Scotia women may also face particular challenges in leaving abusive partners and finding the help they need. For example, historical and present discrimination and experiences of racism have resulted in many African Nova Scotians not trusting the police and the justice system.

Some African Nova Scotian women may worry that reporting abuse will expose their partners to racism from police and the justice system. They may also worry that reporting abuse will keep alive stereotypes that African Canadian men are violent.

For many African Nova Scotian people, extended family and kinship are important. Some African Nova Scotian women may fear having to leave their community and family support network if they report abuse and seek help.

See page 132 for resources for African Nova Scotian women.

First Nations Women

Women in First Nations Communities also face unique barriers in leaving abuse and accessing support services. First Nations women may be reluctant to leave abuse because it can mean leaving a community where they have kinship and cultural roots.

First Nations women may also worry about reinforcing stereotypes and negative perceptions about First Nations people and family violence.

First Nations women may have fears that staff at support services will not understand their cultural needs. They may also be reluctant to interact with police or the justice system because of past and current experiences of oppression and racism by the police and justice system.

Mi'kmaw Family Healing Centres (MFHC), located in Waycobah and Millbrook First Nations, deliver treatment and prevention services to all 13 Mi'kmaw First Nation Bands of Nova Scotia. MFHC's Board of Directors are the 13 Bands and a Representative from the Nova Scotia Native Women's Association. MFHCs operate 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

All of the counsellors and support staff are committed to assisting Mi'kmaw women, men, and children to develop and maintain a healthy and violence-free lifestyle. Families receive treatment in their own communities with counsellors who are knowledgeable of their language, values, and lifestyle.

RESOURCES

When women, men, and children are referred to off-reserve programs, the counsellor will ensure that the family member successfully accesses and receives services. This type of holistic programming is well established and practices by MFHC. The Whole-Family Treatment Program is based on the thinking and recommendations of the local and national First Nations community.

Services:

- Protection, safety, shelter, and basic life necessities to women and children
- 24-hour crisis support telephone line
- Support and information to women, men, and children to enable them to develop and maintain a healthful and violence-free lifestyle
- Individual and Group Counselling for women, men, and children
- Outreach services to women, men, and children
- Referral and follow-up to other social services programs

Immigrant Women

Women who are new to Canada also face challenges in leaving abusive relationships. Living in a new country can result in isolation from family and friends, language barriers, and cultural differences that can create difficulties for immigrant women who have experienced abuse.

Women who are new to Canada may not understand Canadian laws and their rights as women living in Canada. Some women may also have concerns about being on their own without male protection.

Newcomer women may also worry about how leaving an abusive relationship could affect their immigration status. This fear is common for many immigrant women, but especially for women who have conditional permanent resident status.

As of 2017, the Government of Canada no longer requires spouses or partners of Canadian citizens and permanent residents to live with their sponsor in order to keep their permanent resident status.

If you receive your Confirmation of Permanent Residence on or after April 18, 2017 and it indicates that you “must cohabit in a conjugal relationship with your sponsor or partner for a continuous period of 2 years after the day on which you became a Permanent Resident”, this requirement no longer applies to you.

In Canada, abuse is not tolerated. If you are a sponsored spouse or partner and are experiencing abuse or neglect by your sponsor or their family, you do not have to remain in that abusive situation.

The Immigrant Settlement Association of Nova Scotia (ISANS) is a leading community organization that welcomes immigrants to Nova Scotia. ISANS offers services and creates opportunities for immigrants. For more information, visit: isans.ca.

immigrants

People who have moved to live in Canada and have Permanent Resident status such as Government-Assisted Refugees, Privately Sponsored Refugees, Economic and Family class immigrants, and Provincial Nominees.

migrants

People who have moved to Canada and do not have permanent status such as Temporary Foreign Workers, Refugee Claimants, and International Students and their families. They are eligible for different services. Immigration status is a crucial social determinant of physical and mental health.

LGBTQ

People often assume that domestic abuse primarily affects cisgender women in heterosexual relationships. This is not true. Lesbians, gay, bisexual, non-binary, transgender, and queer people experience abuse as often, and in some cases more often, than cisgender women in heterosexual relationships.

cis-gender

A word to describe someone whose gender identity matches the gender they were assigned at birth. This is different from someone who is transgender, whose gender identity is different than the gender they were assigned at birth.

non-binary

A word to describe people who do not fit the traditional gender binary of men and women. They may identify as having no gender, more than one gender, or moving between genders.

queer

Though this word has historically been used as a slur, many LGBTQ people have reclaimed this word to describe themselves. Queer can mean many things to different people, but is generally used by those who fall outside of the norms of gender and sexuality.

Bisexual women in particular experience domestic abuse at a much higher rate than average. This can be because of a number of reasons, such as a bisexual woman's partner feeling threatened by her bisexual identity and wanting to control her.

In some cases LGBTQ people who are in abusive relationships do not tell anyone about the abuse because they fear they won't be believed or because they fear their partner may use their sexual orientation or gender identity in an abusive way. For example, they may fear that their abusive partner will expose their sexuality or gender identity to their families, friends, employers, or community.

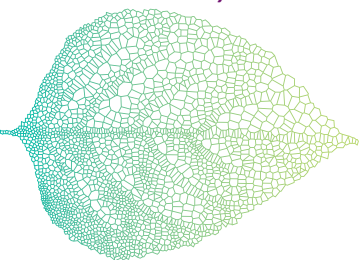

Women who are in relationships with other women may worry about being dismissed by others because of the false assumption that only men abuse. Women who are in same-gender relationships may be impacted by the false belief that violence between people of the same gender is equal so both partners are equally responsible. This same is true for men who are in relationships with other men.

Transgender and non-binary people may be afraid to leave or report abuse because they do not know if support services such as transition houses have transgender-inclusive policies and staff who are trained to be sensitive to their needs and concerns. In the Halifax area, Adsum House, Alice Housing, and Avalon Sexual Assault Centre have formal transgender-inclusive policies.

See the resources starting on page 148 of this book for contact information.

Other organizations in Halifax and other parts of the province may also be welcoming and supportive. If you are a transgender or non-binary person leaving abuse, it can be helpful to talk to members of your community who might know from their own experiences which services are well equipped to provide a safe, supportive space for you.

*It is important to remember that abuse is abuse regardless of your sexual orientation or gender identity.
No matter who you are or who you love,
you do not deserve to be abused.*

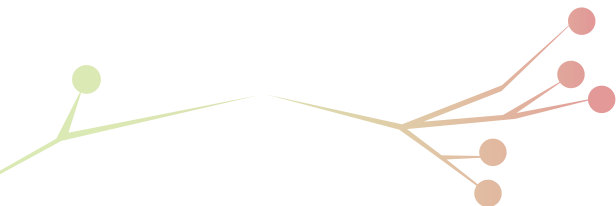

Remember

*There is no excuse for abuse.
Abuse of any kind is never okay.
The abuse is not your fault.
No one deserves to be abused.
It takes a lot of courage to face these issues.
You are not alone.
There are people willing to help.*

Emergencies

What to do in an emergency

If you are in danger, you should call 911 immediately.

All 911 calls are recorded and kept as evidence.

It may be a good idea for you to get legal and other advice now, even before there is an emergency.

Safety plan

A safety plan is a plan for increasing safety and preparing in advance for the possibility of abuse in the future. It is good to be prepared with a safety plan.

A safety plan can be a short-term strategy such as what to do during a violent act, or a long-term strategy such as how to stay safe when the relationship has ended.

It can be helpful to memorize your safety plan because it can be difficult to remember everything in an emergency. If you write down your safety plan, it is important that you keep the safety plan where your partner will not find it.

For a list of programs and services that may be helpful, see the Directory on page 129.

These are some things you should do as part of your safety plan:

- Establish an escape route. Know a safe place to go, even if only to make a phone call.
- If there has been previous abuse, make sure the police are fully aware of the situation.
- Have emergency numbers (a shelter, neighbours, those who will help, and 911) programmed into a safe phone.
- Call a transition house and talk to the staff. Work out a code word with them so they know who is calling if there is a crisis: 1-855-225-0220.
- Speak with your neighbours and other trusted people. Let them know what's going on so they can pay attention and call police if they become concerned.
- Talk to your children. They need to know which neighbour to run to in an emergency and how to use the telephone to call police.
- If possible, put some money aside for things such as emergency taxi fare as well as a spare set of car keys in order to leave quickly.

EMERGENCY BAG CHECKLIST

You may want to pack an emergency bag in case you need to leave quickly. You should pack what you would need for a few days. You may want to leave the bag with a friend.

If you don't feel safe packing an emergency bag, you may want to make a list of things to take and make sure you know where they are kept.

Some items you may want to bring are:

- money, financial statements, credit cards
- clothes for yourself and the children for a few days
- house keys, car keys
- a cell phone and charger cable
- copies of your lease, mortgage, or other deeds, mortgage statements
- car registration, driver's license, car insurance
- identification
- important papers – birth certificates, marriage certificates, social insurance numbers, divorce papers, custody documents, court orders, restraining orders, income tax returns, work permits
- health cards for yourself and the children
- medical and vaccination records
- any medicine you or the children may need
- First Nations status card
- immigration/citizenship papers, passports for you and the children
- the children's favourite toys, books, and special blanket
- picture of your partner (for identification)
- your address book and list of important phone numbers
- your favourite possessions, or other things that will bring you comfort.

Leaving in an emergency

If you want to leave your home, you can ask the police to wait while you get your things. You can ask the police to take you to a safe place like a transition house. If you have children, you have the right to take your children with you.

LEGAL INFO

If you take your children with you, you will need to apply for custody of the children as soon as possible. Do not take the children out of the province without talking to a lawyer first.

The police will not help you remove your children later without a court order.

If you have to leave in an emergency and decide not to go back for a while, the police can return with you to get the rest of your personal belongings. They will protect you, but they're not allowed to help you carry things. You may want to bring a friend to help.

If you decide not to leave and your partner is not arrested, you should write down the names of the police officers who responded in case you need to contact them later.

It is important that you are prepared in case you have to act quickly. Here are some things you might consider:

- Where can you go in an emergency?
- How will you get there? Is there someone who can come and get you? Can you take a car, taxi, or bus?
- Is there someone you can call to let them know what is happening and where you are going?
- Is there someone you can leave your pets with?
- If you need to go to a transition house, do you know how to get there?

What happens when the police are called?

When the police come, their first priority is to stop any abuse and make sure everyone is safe. The police will ask you and your partner questions.

The police will arrest your partner if you've been hurt, or if it is likely that the assault will continue or happen again.

The police will need to know who might have seen or heard anything. They may ask other people about what happened. They may interview your neighbours, friends, or anyone else who might have seen or heard something. If anyone has physical injuries or must go to a clinic or hospital, the police may want to talk to the medical staff who treated them.

The police may take pictures of injuries, people involved, or damage to property where the abuse happened. They may ask you to go to the police station to have pictures taken.

For safety reasons, the police will ask you and your partner questions separately rather than in the same room.

You can decide whether or not to talk to the police about what happened. If you decide to talk to the police, you should give as much detail as you can. You should let them know about any injuries to people, and/or any damage to belongings or the home.

The police will arrest and remove the person who has been charged with an offence.

LEGAL INFO

Assault and uttering threats are criminal offences. If there is evidence that a criminal offence has occurred, the police must lay charges.

Police Priorities

Priority 1

Stop the abuse and make sure everyone is safe.

Priority 2

Gather information by interviewing and taking pictures.

Priority 3

Arrest and remove the person who is being charged.

The police's main concern is for everyone's safety.

What happens if the police lay charges?

If the police lay charges, they may need help collecting evidence of the abuse. There are things you can do to be prepared to share your story, including:

- identifying and securing torn or bloody clothing and any weapons used (bottles, ropes, scarves, sticks, knives, etc.)
- taking photos of injuries, broken furniture, or other damage.
- saving any threatening answering machine, text, or voicemail messages, letters, emails, Facebook posts, etc.
- keeping a record of times and dates, what happened, and any injuries. You should also keep a record of the names and badge numbers of any police officers involved.

LEGAL INFO

If the police do not take pictures, you can ask a friend to do so. The person who takes the pictures should sign and date the photos because they may be important evidence in a trial. Typically, however, the police take photos as appropriate and gather evidence. It is the job of the police to collect evidence. You can assist the police by letting them know about any potential evidence of a crime.

If the police lay charges, they will remove the accused person (the abusive partner) from the home and will typically hold them at the police station, usually for under 24 hours. In some situations, an accused person is not released by the police and is brought before a Judge within 24 hours to decide on their release.

Whether your partner is released by police or brought before a Judge depends on a number of factors. These factors can include the nature of the charges, the level of force your partner used, and whether your partner has a previous criminal record.

In cases of domestic assault, an accused person will have to sign an undertaking or recognizance with a no contact order.

By signing an undertaking with a no contact order an accused person is agreeing not to contact the victim in any way, directly or indirectly, until a Court allows. If an accused person violates a condition in an undertaking, they could face further criminal charges for violating the conditions.

A recognizance is similar, but is entered into before a Judge.

The undertaking or recognizance may require that your partner:

- have no direct or indirect contact or communication with you, your children, or others
- stay away from your home, workplace, or other locations
- not drink alcohol or use non-prescription drugs
- not have and/or use firearms
- follow any other conditions that the police or Judge feel are needed to keep you safe.

Undertakings and recognizances can also contain other conditions that the police, Crown Attorney, or Judge feel are appropriate.

The undertaking or recognizance remains in effect until the criminal case is concluded in Court.

For more information on no contact orders, see pg 59.

direct contact

Direct contact occurs if your partner speaks to you in person or on the phone, writes to you, leaves a telephone, voice mail, emails, texts, or comes into your presence.

indirect contact

Indirect contact occurs when your partner communicates, or tries to communicate, a message to you through another person, or by leaving something for you where they know you will find it.

LEGAL INFO

You might want the no contact order changed because you want to have continued contact with your partner, but only the accused person can apply to Court to have an undertaking changed. The Court will consider whether you would like contact with your partner, but the bigger concern of the Court is protecting public safety.

If your partner does not follow the release conditions in the undertaking or recognizance, they can be held in jail until the charges are dealt with by the Court.

SAFETY

If you feel that your partner may violate a no-contact order, you may want to prepare a safety plan before your partner is released. For more information on safety planning see pages 31-32, and the section starting on page 48.

If charges are laid, the police may refer you to services such as a transition house or provincial victim services. You do not have to leave your home or stay in a transition house to get help from a transition house or victim services. These agencies can give you emotional or practical support, as well as information about community resources and police procedures.

Under Nova Scotia law, the police must keep you informed about what happens to your abusive partner if your partner is arrested for assault.

If you have been the victim of a domestic assault, you can talk to the police in order to find out the conditions of your partner's release.

You can also ask for a copy of the undertaking if the police or the Court did not give you one. You should keep the undertaking with you at all times.

You can get information from the police who made the arrest, police victim services, or a provincial Victim Services office. For more contact information see page 157 of the Directory.

If criminal charges are laid against your partner, you may be required to go to Court to testify.

The provincial Victims' Services Program and some police victim services departments provide court preparation support if you have to testify in criminal court. Transition houses also offer information and support.

RESOURCES

To find the provincial Victim Services office nearest you, call their toll-free number (1-888-470-0773), or visit novascotia.ca/just/victim_services/contact.asp

The Judge may refer or order your abusive partner to go to a men's intervention program. These programs work to help people change their behavior. They encourage people to accept responsibility for their behavior and to create respectful, non-abusive relationships with their partners.

If English is not your first language, you may need a translator or interpreter when you speak with the police, the Court, or transition house staff. Most of these agencies provide this kind of support. For a list of services and contact information see page 145 of the Directory.

You should ask for an interpreter as early as possible, so that there is time to get an appropriate interpreter. For some languages, it can take time to get an interpreter.

LEGAL INFO

In small communities, people are likely to know one another. If you are worried about confidentiality and privacy, you can ask for the interpreter's name before the interpreter is given your name, and before you meet. You can refuse an interpreter who is known to you and your family.

RESOURCES

For more information about going to Court to testify, you can read the following brochure, Being a Witness in a Family Violence Case: www.legalinfo.org/i-have-a-legal-question/criminal-law/#being-a-witness-agir-comme-temoin-2

If you are seeking help or are looking for information about abuse, call the Transition House Association of Nova Scotia's 24-hour toll-free line: 1 855 225 0220

You can also contact the local transition house (women's shelter) in your area. See pages 155-156 of this book for a complete list.

Domestic Violence Court Program

Persons in Cape Breton and the Halifax Regional Municipality who are charged with a criminal offence that occurred in the context of an intimate partner relationship may access the Domestic Violence Court Program. This program supports partners who have been harmed by domestic violence, children of those involved in the program, and those accused of using violence against their intimate partner.

The purpose of the Domestic Violence Court Program (DVCP) is to respond to the needs of people affected by domestic violence. The program offers meaningful interventions that lead to safer families and communities.

This program is a different approach than regular criminal court. The DVCP tries to ensure that supports are in place to stop the harm of domestic violence.

The Domestic Violence Court Program is a post-charge program. Only individuals who have been charged with an offence that occurred in the context of an intimate partner relationship may be considered for participation. In order to participate, the person charged must:

- be 18 years of age or older
- live in, or be substantially connected to, the Cape Breton Regional Municipality or Halifax Regional Municipality (HRM), or the offense must have occurred in Cape Breton or the HRM
- be willing to plead guilty to the charge(s) against them and accept responsibility for the harm caused
- undergo an assessment by the Program Team to see if they are a good fit for the program
- be accepted for participation in the DVCP by the Program Team
- have the consent of the Crown Attorney to participate in the DVCP

When the person charged has finished their participation in the DVCP, they will be sentenced in court. The sentence is decided by the Judge, who will take into consideration the person’s participation in the program.

What happens if child protection gets involved?

If a report is made, Child Protection Services will contact the child's parents. Child Protection Services will suggest services and resources to help the family. If Child Protection Services suspects that a child is experiencing abuse and/or neglect, or may be in need of protection, they will conduct an investigation. They can remove a child from the home if they believe it is necessary in order to keep the child safe.

LEGAL INFO

If you are asked to sign anything, or if your child is removed from your home, you should contact a lawyer immediately. Domestic abuse outreach services or a transition house can give you information and support, including information about how to get legal advice. See the Legal Matters section of this book starting on page 93 or call 1 855 225 0220 any time of day for services.

Child Protection matters can be very complicated and can have a serious, potentially long-term impact on your family. In some cases, children are removed permanently from their parents. If Child Protection Services becomes involved with your family, it is very important that you speak to a lawyer as soon as possible.

For more information, see the "Your Children" section of this book starting on page 105.

RESOURCES

Sometimes Child Protection will ask parents to sign a Memorandum of Understanding. This is an agreement to allow services to be put in place while the children stay in your care.

If Child Protection Services wants you to enter into a Memorandum of Understanding, you should call Nova Scotia Legal Aid. Nova Scotia Legal Aid will sometimes provide appointments to parents who need legal advice.

Safety Planning

Help is available

If you have difficulty figuring out whether you are at risk, you may find it helpful to talk with someone at the local transition house, or with a counselor at a men's intervention program.

Women's centres can also provide information and support. A counselor or transition house worker can help figure out how safe you are and identify possible ideas and options that would make you safer. They can also give you information and support, and help you explore your options and with any planning steps that you want to consider.

You may decide that you want to live at a transition house or shelter for a few weeks until you can figure out if you want to stay and work on improving your relationship, or if you want to move toward a temporary separation or divorce.

Everyone is different. You must make your own decisions about the strengths of your relationship, and the potential it has to become what you want. Even if you decide to stay with your partner, transition houses can give you the opportunity to learn about improving your relationships, establishing your independence and financial security, or if you just need to talk: 1 855 225 0220

A safer relationship may be possible if both you and your partner:

- want a respectful, fair, and caring relationship
- are willing to take responsibility for your own choices and behavior, and to work towards change
- are willing to learn how to stop using threats or resorting to abuse
- are able to communicate what you want in your relationship in a non-violent way.

Accessing support

If you are considering whether to stay or leave the relationship, you may have to make some very difficult decisions. You can choose to talk over your situation with a counselor or therapist. They can help you understand more fully what you are thinking and feeling about the relationship and your situation. This process can help you make decisions about your future.

While you may be focused on the reasons to stay, a counselor can help you consider the reasons why you may want to leave. These decisions can be very complex, and everyone has the right to make these decisions for themselves.

If your partner is committed to ending the abuse, your partner will have to take steps to deal with the problems that led to the abusive behaviour. This could include:

- counseling for alcoholism and/or drug use
- addressing past trauma
- dealing with feelings of past victimization
- recognizing the pressures of traditional gender roles
- dealing with feelings of insecurity and desperation
- finding healthy ways to deal with unemployment.

SAFETY

Transition houses can advise you about what help and services are available to you. See page 155 for contact information.

Help line numbers can usually be found at the front of the phonebook and in the Yellow Pages under social service organizations as well as women's organizations and services. See page 129 of the Directory at the back of this book for services.

If you are in immediate danger, call 911.

To find out about services in your area, call 211.

If you are seeking help or are looking for information about abuse, call the Transition House Association of Nova Scotia's 24-hour toll-free line: 1 855 225 0220

You may want to pack an emergency bag in case you need to leave quickly. See pages 31-32 for Safety Planning and Emergency Bag Checklists.

Finding a counselor or support person

You can find support through private or publically funded counseling. Family therapists are listed under Marriage and Family Therapy in the Yellow Pages. Many employers offer employee assistance programs that will assist with counseling referrals.

In addition to individual counseling, you and your partner can seek counseling together if you feel safe enough to do this. Many couples benefit from having counseling together. This type of counseling is offered through a local family services association or at programs designed to help men heal and repair the effects of their abusive behavior on their families. See the Directory, starting on page 129, for resources.

If a no-contact order is in place, couples counseling is not an option without returning to Court to have the order changed.

You and/or your children may be eligible for free counseling from the Criminal Injuries Counselling program. See page 134 for contact information.

What to look for in a counselor or support person

You may find it helpful to talk with someone you can trust – a friend or relative, a spiritual leader or elder, a doctor, or a counselor. A support person should be able to offer:

- the opportunity to explore the advantages and disadvantages of continuing your relationship rather than telling you or advising you that you should leave
- the assumption that you know more about your relationship and your partner than the counselor or support person
- support to improve your relationship, or support to end your relationship, depending on what you choose for yourself
- the ability to accept if you change your mind about whether you want to stay or leave, and not pressure you to choose one option over the other
- acceptance that your partner can be abusive but also loving and caring, which can make the decision to stay or leave very difficult
- access to resources and referrals
- assistance, if asked for, in making a safety plan.

Counselors and support people should avoid:

- labeling your partner as “abusive”
- labeling your relationship as an “abusive relationship”
- seeing your partner only as an “abuser”
- not validating any positive things that happen in the relationship.

There are always people you can talk to, such as a trusted friend or relative, or a person at the local transition house. You can call a transition house anytime to get information, support, and safety planning from a trained counselor, even if you do not want to live at the shelter.

Transition house counselors will give support on the phone. These phone calls are confidential and you do not need to give your name. You can call the 24-hour crisis line:

1 855 225 0220. If you want to, you can arrange a visit to the transition house to speak with someone in person. Some houses have workers who can meet you in your home or somewhere safe.

Transition houses can help you even if you are not staying at one.

Do I Stay or Leave?

Making the choice to stay or leave can be difficult. There are people who can help you decide what is right for you, your relationship with your partner, and your children. It can be helpful to talk with someone who has walked this journey with others.

Call the Transition House Association of Nova Scotia's 24-hour toll-free number to just talk: 1 855 225 0220.

How safe is it to stay?

Sometimes people who have experienced abuse say they feel safe in their relationships even if there is abuse.

Before you can make positive choices about your life, you need to be safe.

Sometimes it can be difficult to know how safe you are. For example, if you are in a relationship where the abuse has increased gradually over time, it can be hard to tell how dangerous your situation really is. Sometimes you might not want to tell anyone how serious the danger is because you blame yourself or feel ashamed about what is happening.

SAFETY

The situation may be dangerous if your answers YES to any of these questions:

Has your partner ever threatened to kill you or anyone else?

Does your partner own a weapon?

Has your partner tried to physically prevent you from leaving?

Do you think your partner might physically hurt you and/or your children?

Has your partner ever assaulted you when you were pregnant?

Has your partner been violent toward others outside the family?

Has your partner been abusive when drinking alcohol or taking drugs?

If the answer to any of these questions is yes, you may find it useful to talk to someone about how to stay as safe as possible while planning what to do next.

You should NOT tell your partner if you are planning to leave.

What can I do if I am worried about my safety?

If you feel like you are in immediate danger, call 911 or the police right away.

You can call police and report abuse at any time. It does not have to be an emergency.

If you are concerned about your abusive partner threatening or harming you, you can also apply for a Peace Bond or an Emergency Protection Order (EPO).

Emergency Protection Orders (EPOs)

If domestic violence has occurred, and your situation is serious and urgent, you can apply for an Emergency Protection Order (EPO). You should check with the local police, transition house, or victim services office to talk about applying and to make safety plans for you and your children.

EPOs are short term, temporary orders granted under the Domestic Violence Intervention Act to help protect victims of abuse at a time of crisis.

An EPO can provide a number of conditions including:

- giving you exclusive occupation of your home for up to 30 days
- giving you temporary possession of personal property, such as a car
- giving you or somebody else temporary care and custody of your children
- directing a peace officer, such as a police officer, to remove your partner from the home and accompany you to your home to supervise getting your personal belongings, or accompany your partner to supervise getting their personal belongings.

It can require your partner to:

- stay away from any place identified in the order, such as your home and workplace
- have no contact with you or another person
- not take, sell, or damage property
- not commit any further acts of abuse against you.

An EPO can be put in place right away, and can last up to 30 days. You can apply for an EPO over the phone by calling a Justice of the Peace Centre (see page 137 for numbers), or you can go to a transition house where trained staff can help you apply. Police and victim services officers can also help you apply for an EPO at any time. Interpretation may be available for those who need it.

Unlike a Peace Bond, the abuser (called the respondent) will not receive notice when you apply for an EPO. If an EPO is put in place, the police will notify the respondent as soon as possible. Once notified, the respondent must follow the conditions of the EPO.

To apply for an EPO you must:

- be at least 16 years old
- have experienced abuse from a person you are, or have been, in an intimate relationship with
- live with the abusive partner now, or have lived with them in the past, or have a child or children together even if you have never lived with each other.

Peace Bonds

A Peace Bond is a court order you can apply for if you fear that your partner or ex-partner will harm you, your family, or your property. A Judge will consider your reasons for the peace bond, and make a decision.

A Peace Bond can require that your abusive partner stay away from you for as long as one year. A Peace Bond may require that the abuser:

- have no direct or indirect contact or communication with you, your children, or others
- stay away from your home, workplace, or other locations
- not drink alcohol or use non-prescription drugs
- not have and/or use firearms
- follow any other conditions that the Judge feels are important to keep you safe.

Only a Judge can order a Peace Bond. Usually both you and the abuser will have to go to a court hearing for a Peace Bond.

Interpretation may be available if you are hearing impaired or need a translator.

Applying for a Peace Bond may take some time. If you have an EPO and you think you might want to apply for a Peace Bond in the future, you should talk with a lawyer. In most cases, an application for a Peace Bond can be made at Provincial Court. Family Courts and Supreme Court (Family Divisions) usually do not deal with Peace Bonds.

Unlike an EPO, a Peace Bond application requires that the person named receives notice that an application has been made and has a chance to respond.

If your situation is urgent you may want to talk with a lawyer, the police, a victim services office, or transition house staff about applying for an EPO as the EPO provides emergency assistance for individuals at a time of crisis. Longer term measures such as peace bonds may then be accessed.

Deciding to stay

Understanding reasons for staying

Often people ask “Why don’t you just leave?”

There are many legitimate reasons why you might stay, even if you do not love your partner or even if you see no potential of the relationship changing. Rather than judging you, others should try to understand your reasons for staying. Often there is more complexity in your relationship than just your partner’s abusive behavior.

You might identify with the following reasons for staying with your partner.

Emotional reasons for staying:

- feeling of not being able to cope alone
- fear of threats made by your partner
- fear that your partner will take revenge on you for leaving
- fear of going to Court or calling the police
- feeling responsible for failing and/or for breaking up the family
- fear of loneliness
- loving your partner and hoping that your partner will change
- believing that you are to blame for your partner's abuse
- fear of blame or rejection by your family or friends
- fear of losing your partner by leaving temporarily
- fear of your partner's threats to keep the children
- fear of your partner's threats to commit suicide or kill you and/or the children
- self-shaming in seeing yourself only as a victim
- not recognizing that you are a victim of abuse.

Financial reasons for staying:

- having no income of your own, or an income that is lower than your partner's
- having debt you share with your partner
- having to leave the family home
- lack of job skills
- a belief that your partner will not pay maintenance or support
- insufficient government assistance
- feelings of shame if you need to rely on government assistance
- lack of affordable child care and housing
- lack of information about your legal rights

Social, cultural, and religious reasons for staying:

- fear of victim-blaming, or the attitudes of others who deny or minimize the abuse
- social pressure on women to feel responsible for relationships
- religious beliefs about women's roles and/or beliefs about marriage
- cultural pressures such as concerns about shame and family honour
- lack of culturally competent support services and institutions
- fear of social disapproval if you separate or divorce
- belief that you can change your partner if you are loving enough
- belief that you need a partner to be whole
- belief that children need a two-parent household
- lack of support or isolation from family and friends
- inadequate support from police, the legal system, etc.
- lack of information about your legal rights
- isolation from your community.

Deciding to leave

We need to remind ourselves that we are strong. Making decisions and changes can be confusing and difficult. Reading this book is a start.

SAFETY

If you are in immediate danger, call 911.

If you are seeking help or are looking for information about abuse, call the Transition House Association of Nova Scotia's 24-hour toll-free line: 1 855 225 0220

If you are in an abusive relationship, you may need to leave in an emergency.

In some situations, even if you fear for your life, you could be afraid to leave or feel that you cannot leave.

You always have the option to leave for a while, or you can leave permanently. You have the option to leave even if it's not an emergency situation.

Leaving can be a very hard decision to make. You may find that leaving for a while and returning works for you. This may show your partner that you are serious about the need for change. However, despite your partner's promises to change, you may also find that the abuse continues and the only way to stop it is to leave for good.

Whatever you choose to do, you need to believe in yourself.

Where can you go to be safe?

You need to be somewhere safe. You may want to think about where your partner might look for you and where your partner wouldn't find you. You could stay with a friend or a relative. You could also go to a hotel or a transition house.

Transition houses are emergency shelters for women, with or without children.

There are several transition houses in Nova Scotia. They all take children. Transition houses have staff who will work with you to understand your options. Some transition houses are wheelchair accessible. Transition houses do not allow pets.

Transition houses usually have secret addresses so that women can stay safe. When you call a transition house, staff will arrange to meet with you. If you are in an emergency situation and the police are called to your home, the police can drive you to the transition house.

You can call the Transition House Association of Nova Scotia's toll-free number (1 855 225 0220) to find the nearest transition house. See pages 155–156 of this book for a list of Transition House phone numbers.

There will be someone to listen to you at the transition house. Staff can give you advice about your medical, legal, and financial situation. They will help you explore what you can do. They will not force you to do anything. You can decide what's best for you.

What you discuss with transition house staff will be private. However, there are some exceptions. You should ask transition house staff to explain these exceptions. One important exception is that anyone who suspects that a child is being abused must report this to Child Protection Services. This includes staff at transition houses.

At transition houses:

- You can stay for up to six weeks
- Food, clothing, and other necessities are provided
- There is no cost to stay, but you are expected to help with cooking and housework, and to abide by house rules.

There will be other women and children at the transition house. It may help you just to talk with someone who has had a similar experience.

If you stay at a transition house, you and your children may be given a private room, or you may have to share a room with others.

All transition houses have outreach programs and workers who will continue to help you once you leave the transition house.

If you decide not to stay at a transition house, transition house staff can still help you with information and referral services.

Some transition houses have wheelchair accessible rooms and baths (see pages 155–156 for houses that are wheelchair accessible).

If the abuse continues

Once you leave, your partner's abusive behaviour may continue for a while, or get worse. Your abusive partner may try to control you financially, through the children, through the courts, through physical abuse, or by threatening and harassing you. One way you can handle this is to have as little contact with your partner as possible. You can do this by communicating through your lawyer, or through the police when necessary. If you are still afraid, you can apply for a Peace Bond if you don't have one yet.

Your abusive partner may:

- be very loving and generous
- shower you with gifts and attention
- try to scare you into returning
- use relatives or friends to pressure you

If your abusive partner continues to contact you, they may be breaking the conditions of their release, or they could be charged with criminal harassment. You should keep a written record of all contact with your abusive partner as well as what your partner does or says. You should also keep any written or recorded messages from your partner. You should tell the police, your partner's probation/parole officer (if your partner has one), and your lawyer if your partner contacts you.

Transition house staff, the police, the probation/parole officer, provincial and police Victim Services, your lawyer, a counselor, or a supportive friend can help you get through this period. You shouldn't be afraid to ask for help. You don't deserve to be harassed. You deserve a better life.

Internet and computer safety

Computers and mobile devices can store a lot of private information, including:

- emails
- texts
- instant messages
- internet searches
- bookmarked webpages
- webpages viewed
- internet-based phone and IP-TTY calls
- web-based purchases
- banking

SAFETY

If you are in danger, it is important that you try to use a safe computer that your partner cannot access. You can use a computer at a public library, at a community centre, or at a trusted friend's house.

If you think you are being monitored on your home computer, you should be careful. It doesn't take special skills to monitor someone's computer and Internet activities—anyone can do it. You may want to keep using the monitored computer for regular, everyday activities like looking up the weather, and use a safer computer to research an escape plan, look for new jobs or apartments, arrange travel, or ask for help.

It is not always possible to delete or clear all the “footprints” that show what you have been doing on your computer and online. Also, if you are being monitored, it may be dangerous to change your computer activity (for example, by suddenly deleting the entire Internet history if that is not your regular habit).

Email and Instant/Text Messaging (IM) are not safe or confidential ways to talk to someone about the danger or abuse in your life. If possible, you should call a crisis line on a safe phone instead.

If you use email or IM to communicate about the abuse, make sure to use a safe computer or mobile device, and an account your partner does not know about.

CyberSCAN Unit

If your abusive partner is harassing you online, or if you are a victim of cyberbullying or unwanted sharing of intimate images, you are protected under the law.

You can speak to someone at the CyberSCAN unit of Nova Scotia. CyberSCAN staff can help victims find a solution to a dispute involving cyberbullying or the sharing of intimate images.

They can contact the person who shared the images or cyberbullied the victim to try to resolve the matter informally using dispute resolution, including advice, negotiation, mediation and restorative practices.

These services are voluntary, so you don't have to participate if you don't want to. CyberSCAN can also help victims navigate the justice system and understand their options. This is a free service.

CyberSCAN staff can help you in gathering evidence, looking into your issue, and coming to a resolution. Though the CyberSCAN unit sometimes works with police, it is not the police.

If you are experiencing online harassment and abuse, you can contact the CyberSCAN unit at 1-855-702-8324 or 902-424-6990 within the HRM to file a complaint.

For more information and definitions of what cyberbullying or an intimate image is under the law, go to cyberscan.novascotia.ca.

Intimate Images and Cyber-Protection Act

The Intimate Images and Cyber-Protection Act aims to discourage people from bullying others online or by text or email, and from sharing intimate images of someone without their consent.

The act also gives victims a way to respond when these things happen.

Cyber-protection orders

If you're a victim of cyberbullying or unwanted sharing of intimate images, or a parent or guardian of a victim under the age of 19, you can also apply to the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia for a cyber-protection order under the Intimate Images and Cyber-protection Act.

A cyber-protection order can be issued to stop the bullying or image-sharing.

These orders may tell someone to:

- stop sharing an intimate image
- stop posting communications that would be considered cyberbullying
- stop contacting the victim in the future
- take down or block access to an intimate image or communication
- decide that an image is an intimate image or that communication is cyberbullying
- participate in dispute resolution
- pay damages to the victim

The fee to file an application is $218.05. You must also get a law stamp from the Court Administration Office for $25.00 + HST.

If your income is below a certain amount, you may apply to have the court fees waived so you won't have to pay them.

To do this, you will have to complete a Waiver of Fees Application and file it with the Court Administration Office.

Abuse and the workplace

Abuse can affect every aspect of your life, including your job. You may:

- miss work
- be distracted at work
- be less productive at work
- be more stressed than usual
- be worried you will lose your job if you talk about the abuse.

There are things you can do to help your employer help you stay as safe as possible at work. You could:

- let your employer know if you have protection orders or restraining orders, and if the workplace is mentioned in the orders. It may be helpful to give your employer a copy of the orders.
- give your employer a recent photo or description of your partner. This can help security and reception staff know who to look for or screen.
- write down all incidents of abuse in the workplace, and how the abusive behavior affects your work. Your employer can work with you to address performance issues.
- talk to your employer about scheduling policies or other human resource policies and practices that could help you.

There are ways your employer may be able to help keep you safe at work. You may want to ask:

- if you could work in locations where you are not visible and easily accessible to visitors. This will help prevent people seeing you from outside.
- to have your contact information removed from public records and directories.
- if a co-worker or a supervisor could screen your calls.
- for a new phone number.
- to have your partner's email address blocked from the office system.
- to have a panic button installed in your work area.
- for a well-lit, priority parking spot near the building.
- if a co-worker could escort you to and from your vehicle or public transportation.
- for a cell phone with a pre-programmed 911 security feature.
- for information about resources and people who could offer support.

If you work with your abusive partner, there are steps your employer can take to keep you as safe as possible. These steps could include:

- making sure that the abuser does not work closely with you, or have access to your workspace.
- making an effort to give both employees different work schedules, or having them work at different sites.
- holding your abusive partner accountable for any unacceptable behavior in the workplace, and using disciplinary procedures to deal with abuse.
- calling the police if your abusive partner engages in violence or other criminal activity such as stalking or unauthorized electronic monitoring in the workplace.
- making sure your job is not negatively impacted because you told your employer about the abuse.

Domestic Violence Leave

As of January 1, 2019, an employee who experiences domestic violence or whose child experiences domestic violence, is entitled to take a leave from work of up to ten days, which can be taken intermittently or consecutively, and/or sixteen consecutive weeks in each calendar year.

Domestic violence leave may be taken to:

- seek medical attention for the employee or their child for physical or psychological injuries, or disability caused by the domestic violence
- obtain psychological or other counselling from a qualified person for the employee or their child
- obtain services from a victim services organization, transition house, the Department of Justice, a municipal police department, or the RCMP
- seek legal or law enforcement assistance, including to prepare for or participate in legal proceeding related to or resulting from the domestic violence
- relocate temporarily or permanently.

Employees are entitled to a leave of absence if:

- the employee has been employed at their current job for at least three months
- the employee or a child of the employee experiences domestic violence.

If an employee needs to take domestic violence leave, they must let their employer know in writing as soon as possible.

Once you have left

Once you are safe, you can take some time to decide what to do next. You will need time and space to make decisions that are best for you and your children.

Some of the first things you may need to do is to find out about:

- where you can go to be safe
- your legal rights
- what to do if you don't have enough money
- how to get child support and child custody.

The following sections provide some information about these issues.

Where do I live?

When you leave an abusive situation, you can go to a transition house, a motel, or stay with your friends or family. In some communities, you may be able to get low-cost housing. The nearest Housing Nova Scotia office will have information about low-cost housing. Their offices are listed in the blue pages at the back of the phone book, and online: housing.novascotia.ca.

You can visit the Housing Nova Scotia website for more information and for application forms (housing.novascotia.ca/programs/public-housing-and-other-affordable-rental-programs). You can also call 211 to find out about the different types of housing available, and how to apply.

In some communities, women who need ongoing housing support may apply to stay at second stage housing: safe and affordable housing for women where you can stay for up to two years. Your local transition house will have information about second stage housing. You can call your local transition house (pages 155–156), or call the Transition House Association of Nova Scotia's toll-free number (1 855 225 0220) for more information.

The process for getting a place in second stage housing is different depending on the organization. For example, to get the support you need, you may have a telephone interview and then a follow-up meeting. Some second-stage housing organizations have a support worker who will work with you to figure out your housing needs. You may have to go through an application process. For more information, you can contact the second-stage housing organization nearest you. Contact information for second-stage housing can be found on page 152 of this book.

Renting an apartment or house

Newspaper and websites like Kijiji are good places to start looking for an apartment. The classified ads often contain information about what is available, the cost of rent, and what is included.

LEGAL INFO

The law says that a landlord cannot refuse to rent an apartment to someone because they have children. They can, however, refuse to rent to people with pets.

When you rent an apartment, it is usual for you to sign a lease. A lease is a contract stating who is renting the place, how long it will be rented for, the cost of rent each month, and which services will be paid by the tenant and landlord. By law the landlord must give the tenant a copy of the lease.

You usually have to pay a damage deposit when you sign a lease. A damage deposit is usually half a month's rent. If the apartment is not damaged when you move out, this money should be refunded by the landlord. If it isn't, you can apply to Residential Tenancies to get your damage deposit back.

For information on tenancy issues and contact information for Residential Tenancies, visit:

novascotia.ca/sns/access/land/residential-tenancies.asp

If you are receiving income assistance, ESIA may pay the damage deposit in some cases if the health and safety of you or your family are in question. YWCA Halifax's December 6th fund may also be able to help: ywcahalifax.com/programs/violence-against-women.

What do I want in an apartment?

When you call to ask about an apartment, you can ask about the safety of the building, the cost, whether heat and lights are included, the damage deposit fee, the amount of space, and the location of, and distance to, schools.

There are also some questions you should ask yourself when looking for an apartment, such as:

Safety

What do you need to be safe from your partner?

Do you need to be on the third floor or higher?

☐ yes ☐ no

Do you need a building with security?

☐ yes ☐ no

Cost

How much can you pay for rent?

How much can you pay for heat and lights?

Are heat and lights included in the rent?

☐ yes ☐ no

Space

How many bedrooms do you need?

How much space do you need?

Location

How close do you need to be to work?

Do you need to be close to schools?

☐ yes ☐ no

Other options

Do you want to live alone or share an apartment?

If you have children, would you like to share with another single parent?

☐ yes ☐ no

My apartment list:

You may be eligible for basic Income Assistance if the income you have to pay for your basic needs is less than the amount you may receive on income assistance. The amount of assistance you receive depends on your circumstances. Find out more at: novascotia.ca/coms/employment/income_assistance/index.html

Income assistance only allows a certain amount for rental costs. You can visit the Income Assistance website to find out how much assistance is available: novascotia.ca/coms/employment/income_assistance/BasicAssistance.html

Monthly Shelter Allowance

In hospital 30 days or more	$125	$125	Not applicable
In a residential rehabilitation program	$101	$101	Not applicable

* If you do not get the Nova Scotia Child Benefit or the National Child Benefit Equivalent for a dependent child under the age of 18, you can ask for a Child Benefit Adjustment (CBA). You must file your income tax each year to get your Child Tax Benefits. Ask your caseworker for more information.

Ending a lease early

Under a year-to-year lease, a tenant normally ends their lease by giving notice three months before the anniversary date. A fixed-term lease normally ends at the end of the term, and the tenant is financially responsible for their rent until their lease ends.

If you are renting a home or apartment and you experience abuse, you may be able to end your lease with only one month's notice, and without any financial penalty.

How can you end a lease early because of abuse?

If you have experienced abuse and want to end your lease early, you need to contact the Department of Justice Victim Services. You will need to fill out an application for a Domestic Violence Certificate and provide one of two things:

EITHER an Emergency Protection Order that was issued during the last 90 days and that has not been overturned by the Court.

OR the following three things together:

- a complaint about domestic abuse filed with the police that identifies you as the victim, and
- a peace bond or other court order that is currently in force that contains a no-contact order because of domestic abuse, and
- an assessment by Victim Services that says that you have been a victim of domestic abuse.

RESOURCES

For more information, or to begin your application for a Domestic Violence Certificate, you can contact the Nova Scotia Victim Services office in your area, visit novascotia.ca/just/victim_services/contact.asp, or call their toll-free line: 1-888-470-0773. They will help you with the application process to get a Domestic Violence Certificate and explain how you should submit the notice to your landlord.

What happens to our house?

If you are married or in a Registered Domestic Partnership, you and your partner have equal legal rights to the house. If you are in a common law relationship, you may also have some entitlement to a property that you and your partner shared.

Whether you are married, in a Registered Domestic Partnership, or in a common law relationship, you should talk with a lawyer about your property rights.

RESOURCES

For information about the differences between a marriage, a Registered Domestic Partnership, and a common law relationship, visit the Nova Scotia Family Law website: nsfamilylaw.ca/what-are-some-differences-between-common-law-relationship-and-registered-domestic-partnership

Unless there is a court order or written agreement saying otherwise, both partners have a right to live in the matrimonial home.

If you are married or in a Registered Domestic Partnership, the house cannot be sold without your consent even if the house is in your partner's name, but you should get legal advice as soon as possible.

If you are not married or in a Registered Domestic Partnership, you only have the right to remove anything that you owned before the relationship, or bought during the relationship.

Your personal belongings remain yours. You may also take the children's belongings if they are with you.

For information about taking the children with you, see page 110.

If you cannot agree about what happens to the house, you will have to go to Court where a Judge will decide.

Can I keep my partner out of our shared home?

You can talk to your lawyer about applying to the Nova Scotia Supreme Court or Supreme Court (Family Division) to get an “exclusive possession order.” The laws that apply to homes on reserves also allow you to apply for an exclusive possession order. If you live on a reserve and your partner is a member of a First Nation and you are not, you can still apply for an order.

You cannot keep your spouse or partner out of a matrimonial home without a court order such as a family court order, a peace bond, or an emergency protection order.

Your spouse or partner has no right to enter a property you have rented as long as their name is not on the lease.

RESOURCES

For information about ending a lease early because of abuse, see page 84.

For more information on abuse and your rights, visit The Nova Scotia Legal Information Society's factsheet on Domestic Violence: legalinfo.org/i-have-a-legal-question/family-law/#family-violence-2

You can also find general information, legal FAQs, and resources concerning abuse at the Family Law Nova Scotia website: legalinfo.org/i-have-a-legal-question/family-law/#family-violence

What happens if our house is located on a reserve?

If you or your partner is a member of a First Nation and you live in a property on a reserve, different laws apply for dividing matrimonial property.

Under Canadian law, First Nation communities are allowed to create their own matrimonial property laws. If the First Nation has not made its own matrimonial property laws, there are federal laws that apply instead. These federal laws also apply to common law couples.

The division of property on a reserve depends on whether a spouse or common law partner is a member of the First Nation where the house is located. You should speak with a lawyer who can tell you how the law applies to your situation.

What if I do not have enough money?

Financial Support

If you don't have enough money, you may qualify for the Employment Support and Income Assistance (ESIA) program. The ESIA program provides income assistance for basic living needs, prescription drug coverage, and employment supports to help you work towards becoming self-sufficient. You may qualify for help from ESIA right away in an emergency situation.

RESOURCES

To apply for ESIA, you can contact the local Department of Community Services office. A list of offices can be found at novascotia.ca/coms/departement/contact, and on pages 135–136 of this book. Any information you give to ESIA will be kept confidential. A caseworker will meet with you to fill out an application and consent form and let you know if you are eligible. You can appeal any decision made about your eligibility.

If you are able to participate in employment-focused activities, ESIA staff will work with you to support your employment plan. If you are not able to participate in employment activities, staff will work with you to ensure that you receive the services you need to support yourself and your family.

If you leave your home and are expecting a cheque in the mail from your employer, EI, Income Assistance, or child and family benefits, you can call those offices and ask them not to mail your cheque to your home address. It is best if you call as soon as possible. You can have your mail sent to a new address. For a fee, the post office will re-address your mail for up to a year. It will take five to ten days for the post office to start sending your mail to your new address.

If you receive provincial and federal credits such as the Nova Scotia Child Benefit (NSCB), National Child Benefit (NCB), Goods and Service Tax Credit (GST), and the Nova Scotia Affordable Living Tax Credit (ALTC), it is important that you tell the Canadian Revenue Agency (CRA) about any changes to your address, your marital status, your income, or how many children you have.

RESOURCES

You can update your information with the Canadian Revenue Agency online (canada.ca/en/revenue-agency/services/e-services/e-services-individuals.html), or by calling and speaking to a representative.

Individual income tax and trust enquiries: 1-800-959-8281

Universal child care benefit, Canada child tax benefit:
1-800-387-1193

GST/HST credit for individuals: 1-800-387-1193

Whether you leave in an emergency, for a short time, or for good, you have every right to take your children with you, especially if you think they will be in danger if they are left behind.

If you take your children with you, there may be fewer problems later. If you get a divorce or decide not to go back and you don't have your children with you, it can take months for the courts to make a decision about custody. You should get legal advice if you want to take your children out of province. See Your Children, starting on page 105, for more information.

Spousal Support

Spousal support/maintenance is money paid by one former partner to the other. It is often paid to the partner who has a lower income. The laws about spousal support are quite complicated, and there are many different factors that Courts will take into account. You can ask your lawyer about whether you should make an application for spousal support.

More information about spousal support can be found at:
www.nsfamilylaw.ca/general-information-spousal-support.

Getting a Job

There are a number of agencies throughout Nova Scotia that provide support for career planning and job searching. Some of these agencies work exclusively with women. See pages 135–136 of this book for a list. These agencies can help you prepare to return to employment, including helping you figure out:

- how to look for work
- what skills you have
- the type of work you would like
- what jobs exist
- what job training courses are available

It can help to tell everyone you know that you are looking for a job. Sometimes people know about jobs you can apply for.

RESOURCES

Legal Matters

It may be helpful to ask friends or co-workers for names of good lawyers.

Finding a lawyer

Professional legal advice can help you fully understand your legal rights. Lawyers can give you professional legal advice about getting a peace bond, custody of the children, separation and divorce, and other legal matters. Though you might be scared or nervous about going to a lawyer, remember that a lawyer is there to help you if you want to explore your legal options.

RESOURCES

If you don't have a lawyer, you can call the Legal Information Society of Nova Scotia's lawyer referral service Toll-free 1-800-665-9779
Halifax. 902-455-3135
legalinfo.org/i-have-a-legal-question/lawyers-legal-help/#lawyer-referral-service

If you can't afford a lawyer, you can contact Nova Scotia Legal Aid (see page 146 for the location nearest you). This agency may provide free legal services on family law, criminal law, and social justice matters. If you meet the income criteria and have a legal issue that Legal Aid covers, you can get full legal representation at no cost.

Legal Aid works to provide some level of service to all people in the areas of law that they cover (criminal, family, and social justice). Even if you do not qualify financially you may receive some level of service. This could range from summary advice (that is, brief, basic legal advice) from a Legal Aid lawyer in the office to full representation in Court by a Legal Aid lawyer.

In some situations, Legal Aid may also enter into repayment agreements for people who don't qualify but may not be able to afford to hire a private lawyer. Legal Aid would consider the person's specific circumstances (for example, whether that person has experienced abuse).

You can call your local Legal Aid office for more information or to book an appointment. See page 146 at back of this book for legal aid. You can also apply for Legal Aid online at nslegalaid.ca/online-application.

Legal Aid can't work for both you and your partner. If your partner calls first, Legal Aid lawyers can't help you, but they can provide a Legal Aid certificate, which you can take to another lawyer if you qualify for aid.

Find the Legal Aid office nearest you at: nslegalaid.ca/legal-aid-offices

You can also talk to summary advice lawyers who work at the family courts throughout the province. The Summary Advice Counsel is a court-based service provided by Legal Aid in Supreme Court Family Division and Family Courts throughout Nova Scotia. It is separate from the summary legal advice provided by Legal Aid lawyers in their offices. Summary Advice Counsel helps people who need advice on family law matters, but do not have a lawyer of their own. They provide basic legal advice free of charge, regardless of income level.

You can find contact information for the summary advice lawyer nearest you at: nsfamilylaw.ca/services/court/summary-advice-counsel

You should not sign any papers that might affect your legal rights until you speak to a lawyer.

A lawyer may ask you for:

- your marriage certificate or proof of registration for your Registered Domestic Partnership, and the lease, deed, or mortgage to your house
- your partner's most recent pay stubs or income tax return
- your income tax return
- bank statements
- immigration papers/passport
- a written record of your partner's abusive actions
- any court orders and notice of court applications

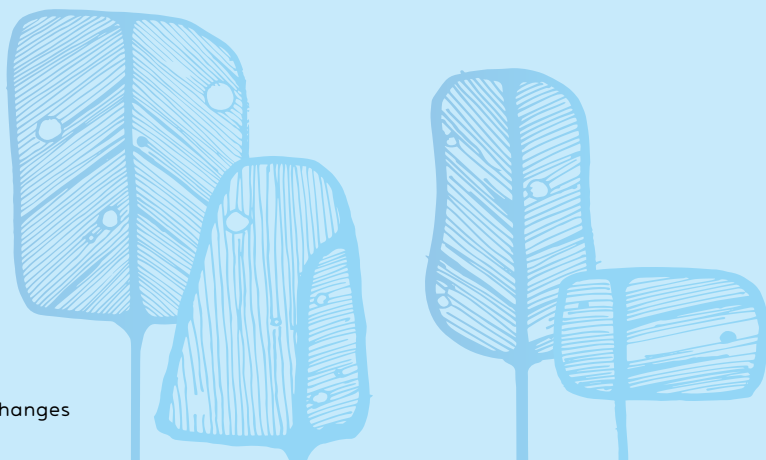

Lawyers are paid by the hour. Depending on the circumstances, lawyers may require a deposit from you. This deposit is called a retainer.

QUESTIONS FOR YOUR LAWYER CHECKLIST

When you see a lawyer, you may find it useful to bring a list of questions and as much information with you as you can.

Here are some issues you may want to discuss with the lawyer:

- legal fees
- custody and access to the children
- who can take the children
- spousal support and child support
- applying for income assistance
- managing debts and assets
- what money is yours
- separation and divorce
- property rights
- concerns about your immigration status
- who has rights to the house and belongings that you and your partner shared
- going to Court and what to expect in Court
- what the Judge will ask
- whether you should apply for a Peace Bond or an Emergency Protection Order
- whether you or your partner can leave the province or country

Where can I find out more?

There is information on legal matters throughout this book. You can refer to the table of contents for where to find information about particular topics (for example, information about criminal charges, getting a Peace Bond or Emergency Protection Order, ending a lease early because of domestic abuse, child protection issues, child support, property issues, and spousal support).

See pages 95–96 for information about Legal Aid and what services it provides.

The following section provides information about other legal resources and getting a lawyer.

Getting information

The Family Law Nova Scotia website is a good resource for legal information on family law matters. Transition houses are also good resources for information on police procedures, how the justice system works, and legal matters. The staff at the transition house can also help you access legal advice. You can contact a transition house for help even if you are not staying there.

More information about the law, lawyers, and legal matters is available from the Legal Information Society of Nova Scotia (LISNS): legalinfo.org

If you need legal information and resources in French, you can contact the Association des juristes d'expression française de la Nouvelle-Écosse (AJEFNE). Through its bilingual Justice Access Centre, AJEFNE provides free legal information in person, by telephone, and online. You can contact AJEFNE at 902-433-2085 (toll-free 1-844-250-8471) or visit their website: ajefne.ns.ca

Legal Information Society of Nova Scotia (LISNS)

LISNS provides legal information to members of the public including:

A lawyer referral service

Private lawyers who are part of the Lawyer Referral Service offer an initial consultation of up to 30 minutes for a fee of $20 plus tax.

Call Monday to Friday 9:30 am-1 pm, and 2pm - 4:30 pm

Some RCMP and police offices have Victim Services which provide information and support to people who have been abused. Victim services also provide information about community resources and what to expect as the case moves through the justice system.

There are also provincial Victim Services offices in four regions of the province. These offices serve all of Nova Scotia, and are a service of the provincial Department of Justice. Staff at these offices can answer questions about your case and the criminal justice process, keep you informed of court proceedings, and help you prepare to testify in Court.

Independent Legal Advice

To give adult survivors of sexual assault better support, the province of Nova Scotia created the Legal Advice for Sexual Assault Survivors program.

To be eligible, participants must be 16 years or older, and the assault must have taken place in Nova Scotia.

Eligible individuals can call 211 to register for the program. Details about what happened are not required to register. You only have to acknowledge that you were sexually assaulted in Nova Scotia, and that you would like to speak with a lawyer.

If you're not sure if you were sexually assaulted, you can still call 211 NS and register for the program. When you meet with the lawyer, they will help you define what happened to you according to the law.

After registering, a package with a certificate number for 2-hours of legal advice is mailed or emailed to the individual depending upon their needs. The package includes a list of participating lawyers, their profiles, and their contact information.

Once you choose a lawyer, you can contact them to speak with them and provide them the 2- hour certificate number. This is how they will know that you are part of the program.

- You can meet with the lawyer in person, by telephone, or through videoconferencing or Skype.
- During your session, the lawyer will help you figure out your legal options, like deciding if you want to report to the police, pursue civil action or take no action.
- The certificate is for you to talk to a pre-approved lawyer about your sexual assault and for you to get legal advice about the assault. The certificate can only be used for this purpose. It is not for legal representation in court.
- If more time is needed, you call 211 again and they will send you another certificate number for another 2-hour session of legal advice.

Confidentiality

Before you share what happened to you, the lawyer will explain any limitations of confidentiality. Once you understand these limits, you can choose to go through with the session or not.

Translation services

If English or French is not your first language, translation services are available for free. Because it can take more time to have an effective meeting with a translator, you will have 3 hours with the lawyer and translator for every 2-hour certificate used.

Laws and rules can be different from province to province. Nova Scotia lawyers can only give advice on laws, programs, and services that exist in Nova Scotia.

The program was developed by Nova Scotia's Department of Justice, but the Department does not have access to participants' names or contact information. When the lawyers send in their invoices, they use the certificate number only.

Your Children

Children often see and hear more than we think. They have probably seen or heard the abuse, and it will likely have affected them.

Children who are exposed to abuse can be as severely affected as children who are direct victims of physical or sexual abuse. They might:

- be scared, confused, and unhappy
- have physical complaints such as headaches or stomach aches
- blame themselves
- experience insomnia, nightmares, or bed-wetting
- have speech difficulties or stop talking
- harm or cut themselves
- behave aggressively or become withdrawn
- cling to their mother or try to take care of her
- exhibit disrespectful or abusive behaviour towards their mother
- feel responsible for the abuse
- seek punishment by lying or stealing (because they believe punishment means love)

When children experience abuse in their home life, even at a young age, they are put at risk of getting stuck in a cycle of abuse.

Children who are exposed to abuse often believe that it's alright to hurt people they love. They learn that it's normal for someone who loves them to hurt them.

Children from violent homes may end up believing that:

- it's okay to hit, boss, or control their partners
- abuse is normal
- abuse is a way to win arguments and get your own way
- it's okay to bully and control women
- women are naturally inferior to men
- women have to put up with abuse to be in a relationship
- "real men" don't feel or show weakness, fear, sadness, or confusion
- adults have power they often misuse
- all men are bullies who push women and children around, and women are weak and can be pushed around
- punishment means love
- women can't take care of themselves or their children
- you can only express anger through aggression and abuse.

LEGAL INFOIf a child sees a parent being abused, this may be considered child abuse under the law.

The Nova Scotia Children and Family Services Act (1991) recognizes that when a child repeatedly witnesses abuse, it is a form of child abuse.

Anyone who suspects that a child under the age of 19 is being abused is required by law to report it. Child protection officers are required by law to remove the child from the home if they believe the child needs protection from the abuse.

Anyone who suspects a child under the age of 16 is being abused by a third party is required by law to report it.

Nova Scotia Children and Family Services Act:

nsls.ca/sites/default/files/legc/statutes/children_and_family_services.pdf

The safety of children is always a priority for people who work with victims of abuse. In some cases, however, domestic abuse outreach services and transition house staff may not be required to report to Child Protection. If you contact domestic abuse outreach services, go to a transition house, or leave your abusive partner, you may be seen as having taken necessary steps to protect you and your children from the abuse.

If you return to the abusive situation and/or put your children in harm's way again, domestic abuse outreach services and transition houses will be required to report to Child Protection.

Bullying and being bullied

Children who are exposed to abuse may become insecure and be at risk of bullying or cyberbullying. They may also become bullies themselves.

Bullying is when someone repeatedly tries to hurt another person's body, feelings, self-esteem, reputation, or property.

It is also bullying to help or encourage someone to bully another person.

Bullying is an expression of aggression and an abuse of power that is similar to the abuse your children witness at home.

Help for children and youth

Children and youth who are exposed to abuse are probably confused, scared, and angry. They may need help dealing with their feelings.

Children need to know that:

- they are safe and will stay safe
- the abuse is not their fault
- they are loved
- it's alright to feel whatever they are feeling
- it's okay to talk about it
- they will be listened to and understood
- it's not okay for them to abuse.

Your children may need to know it is still okay to love their other parent, but they also need to understand that the parent's abusive behaviour is not acceptable. They need to know that you are alright even if you cry or get upset.

Remember: children show their anger and fear to the people they trust, and need to learn how to express their feelings without abuse.

Children may need someone to blame. They may see you as the one to blame because you are the one who left or reported the abuse. Perhaps they often saw your partner blame you for things, and so they do the same.

It can be difficult for you if your children blame you. You will need to have patience in order to help your children understand why change is necessary.

What about custody of the children?

It's important to get legal advice right away regarding child custody. If you want custody of your children, an application for a custody order should be made right away.

Under the laws of Nova Scotia, the most important consideration in custody arrangements is what would be in the best interest of the child. Abuse is one of the factors a Judge will look at in order to decide what is in a child's best interests.

Usually an application for custody must be made at the Court closest to where the children normally live. The Justice Centre in your area can provide the name and location of the Court where you can start the application.

Court Staff can give you information about the documents you need to apply for a custody order. It is best if you speak to a lawyer before you start your application, but you can get a lawyer at any time during the court process, even if you start the application on your own.

If your partner does not follow the terms of the custody order, you should contact your lawyer and the police.

RESOURCES

For more information about custody and access, you can refer to the Family Law Nova Scotia website:
www.nsfamilylaw.ca/custody-access/information-about-custody-and-access/faqs

If you are afraid that your partner may try to take the children to another country, you can ask the passport office to put the children's names on a security list so that you are called if your partner tries to get a passport for them.

You can apply in person or by mail and must provide:

- your own ID,
- the children's birth certificates,
- court documents (such as custody orders, Peace Bonds, etc.), and
- a letter explaining why you want the children's names on the security list.

The passport office usually keeps names on this list for 90 days. After that you must reapply or provide related court documentation.

To find the passport office nearest you, visit cic.gc.ca/english/passport/map/map.asp.

If your children have another nationality and you are concerned that your partner will try to take them to another country, you can contact the embassy or consulate and ask them to refuse to issue passports for the children.

(Consulate and embassy phone numbers can be found in the government blue pages in the phone book, or at travel.gc.ca/assistance/embassies-consulates).

Supervised access and exchange

Courts will often decide that it is in the child's best interests to continue their relationship with both parents. In some cases, a Judge might decide that a child should only see a parent under the close supervision of an independent, neutral third party. Supervised access allows children to have visits with their non-custodial parent (i.e. the parent who doesn't have primary custody) under the supervision of trained staff from community agencies.

Supervised exchange is different than supervised access. Supervised exchange refers to the supervision of the child being dropped off or getting picked up between the care of the custodial and non-custodial parent. Supervised exchange allows drop off and pick up to take place without the parents having to meet.

Safety is the top priority in supervised access and exchange. Referrals to the court-based Supervised Access and Exchange Program happen through a court order.

The Supervised Access and Exchange Program provides a safe, neutral, and child-focused setting in which supervised visits or exchanges can take place. These supervised visits or exchange happen for specified periods of time and in appropriate cases.

To find out more about the different types of exchange, visit www.nsfamilylaw.ca/custody-access/information-about-custody-and-access

The Department of Justice considers supervised access and exchange to be a short term and transitional service for families. The service is generally limited to 20 hours per case, but an extension of the service may be considered on a case-by-case basis.

Supervised Access and Exchange Programs currently operate in Halifax, Sydney, Kentville, Pictou, and Bridgewater.

Child support

If you have your children with you, you are entitled to apply for child support/maintenance from their other parent.

You must make every effort to get a maintenance order or maintenance agreement for yourself and/or the children if you apply for Employment Support and Income Assistance (ESIA). For more information, visit:

novascotia.ca/coms/employment/index.html.

Any maintenance payments that you receive will be counted as income towards your income assistance payment.

You can apply for maintenance yourself through the Family Court. Transition house staff can provide you with information and may be able to help you apply. The Court will work out the amount of support to be paid. Support payments can also be worked out during a divorce proceeding.

You should try to get legal advice about child support. The Court can only work out the amount of child support if the other parent provides their financial information. If it is difficult to get this information from your partner, you can speak to a lawyer for help.

If you do not have a maintenance order or if your child support/ maintenance payments are believed to be too low, you may be referred to the Family Maintenance Income Support Program, which is part of ESIA. They will work with you to get a fair payment. They may help you work out a voluntary agreement so you don't have to go to Court. In some cases where there has been abuse, the ESIA program may take a different approach if there is evidence of increased risk of abuse for you or your children.

Maintenance Enforcement Program

Once you get a child support order, you should receive money for the children regularly (usually every month). When this order is put in place, the Court will automatically register it with the Department of Justice Maintenance Enforcement Program. The role of this program is to make sure you get your child support payments and/or spousal support payments.

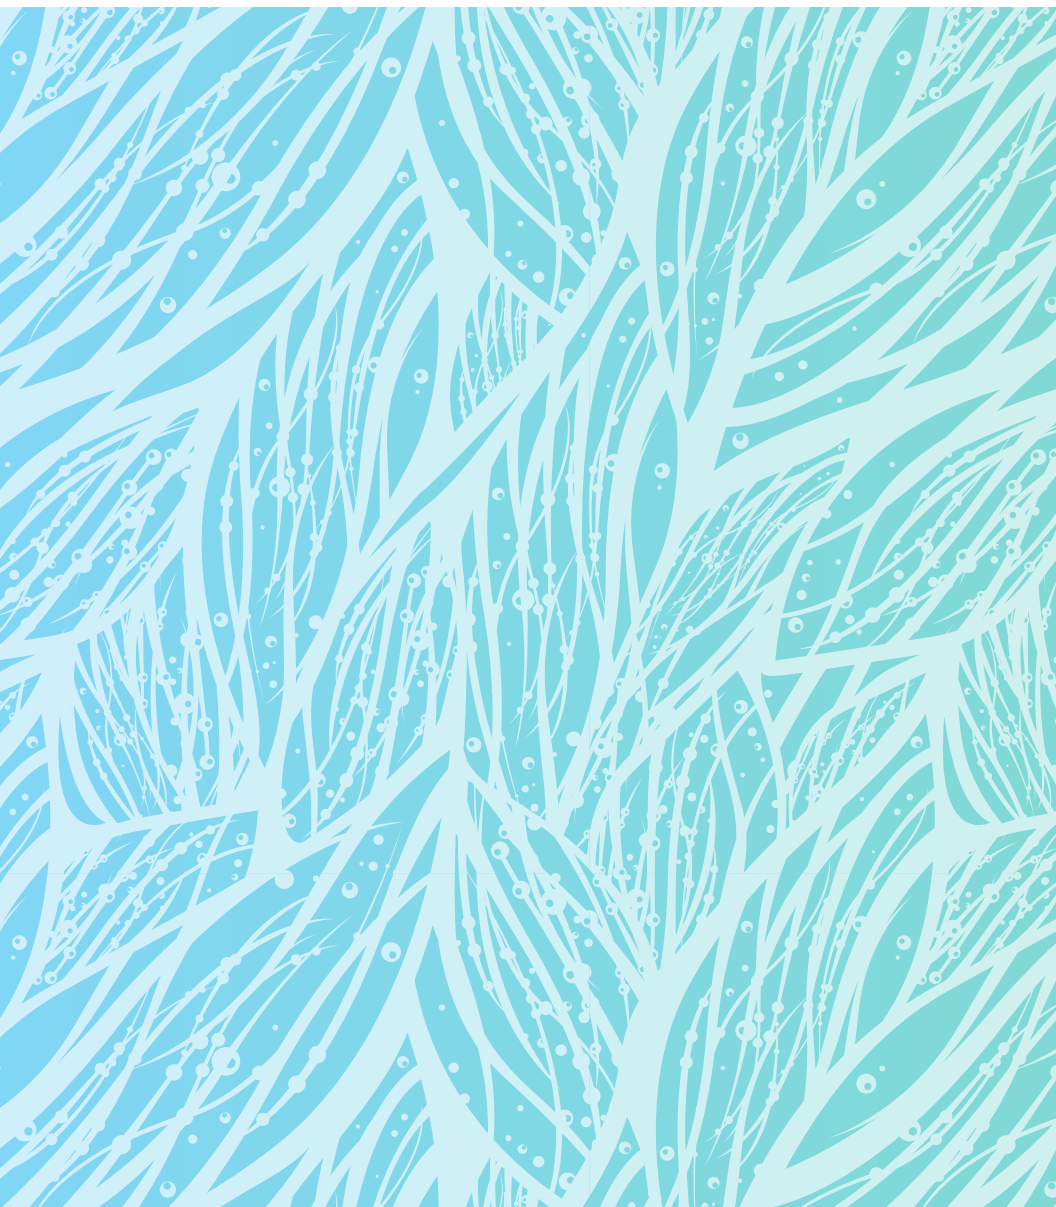

The Maintenance Enforcement Program will register your file as a "caution" case if they are aware that you have been abused by your partner, if there are concerns for your safety, or if you have a Peace Bond in place. This means they will notify you when they contact your partner.

If your abusive partner threatens you or tells you to withdraw from the program, you can contact the police and tell Maintenance Enforcement. Staff will work with you to keep your payments intact.

If you receive income assistance and your support payments are irregular or not being paid, you can sign an Assignment of Maintenance form with your ESIA caseworker. This will allow the Department of Community Services to track and collect your maintenance payments for you. This means that if your partner is not making payments regularly or not making payments at all, ESIA will not include the support payments as income towards the income assistance that you receive.

You may want to open a personal bank account at a new bank and arrange for your cheques to be deposited directly. Your partner will not be able to access the money in your personal account.

Neighbours, Families, Friends, and Co-workers

The following section provides information and suggestions for friends, family, neighbours, and co-workers of people who have experienced abuse. This section will sometimes refer to women as those who have experienced abuse. This is because women are disproportionately affected by domestic abuse. However, many of the points below may be equally valid about anyone you know who has experienced abuse.

There are steps you can take if you suspect someone you know is abusing their partner, or suspect someone you know is being abused. See “Understanding Abuse”, starting on page 1, to learn about different forms of abuse.

Remember: it is against the law for children to be exposed to abuse. If you know of a child who you think may need protection because they are experiencing or seeing abuse, it is your duty to report this to Child Protection Services.

Deal with your thoughts and fears

Sometimes the abusive person feels ashamed about their abusive behaviour. You need to approach them with the assumption that they would prefer to have a relationship without abuse.

Sometimes both partners are ashamed about the abuse. This can lead them to minimize the seriousness of the abuse, or even deny that it is happening.

Sometimes the abusive person is confused about who is responsible for their choice to abuse. Sometimes they want to stop their abusive behaviour, but think that it is the abused partner's responsibility to stop it. Sometimes they say things like, "If she disrespects me, then I will disrespect her", "She made me do it", or "She drove me to it".

Sometimes women who have experienced abuse are also confused about who is responsible. They may blame themselves for their partner's abusive behaviour. It is not the abused partner's fault. There is no excuse for abuse. If one partner is being disrespectful or abusive, it does not give the other partner the right to abuse or be disrespectful toward them.

Often people who abuse are not abusive all the time. They can also be respectful and caring to their partners, family, and friends. People often think a person who is like this could never be abusive. It can be confusing to friends and family to learn that a person they know as loving and caring has been abusive towards their partner.

Friends and family may think the abuse can't be serious if she stays with her partner. Read pages 62–64 to understand why women stay with a person who abuses, and how difficult it can be for women to make changes. Many women love their partners and they simply want the abuse to stop. It may be helpful to read pages 118–124 about how to be a good support person.

Prepare yourself before you offer support

Learning about abuse against women and the supports available by reading this book is a good place to start. It is important to be supportive, but it is also very important to get the professional assistance needed. It can be helpful to talk to a counselor who works with these issues, especially for long-term support. Contact a transition house (women's shelter) in your area to talk to someone about how you can help. You do not have to share your identity.

RESOURCES

Neighbours, Friends and Families is a public education awareness program with a toll-free information line to help people learn about the signs of abuse and what can be done to prevent further abuse.

Call 1-855-225-0220, or visit neighboursfriendsandfamilies.ca for information about this program.

Let her know you are there for her

Asking someone if they are being abused can be very uncomfortable but often it takes no more than asking "Do you need to talk?" or saying "I've been worried about you".

Never tell your friend or family member what she should do. She has to make that choice for herself. You can make suggestions and ask her what she thinks. If you are unsure what this person wants from you, ask.

Know that you are not responsible for her choices. What she does is her choice. Telling her to leave does not help. Don't take the credit or the blame for her decisions.

Be a good listener

Being a good listener can be emotionally demanding. Details about abuse are often painful. You have to be balanced and stable yourself, and able to handle your friend or relative's stories and emotional turmoil. Your job is to be there for her, to just listen. By listening, you can help her work through what is happening and the impact it is having on her and her children. You can affirm that the abuse is not her fault.

Patience is essential when supporting a woman who is being abused. Making changes is a process, not a single act: often it takes months, or even years. Your friend or relative may talk for a very long time before she acts to change or leave her relationship.

Help her make a safety plan if she wants one

Your friend or family member may need to plan an escape route, know where she would go in an emergency, and how she would get there.

See pages 30–33 for information on safety planning.

Encourage her to call police if she is being threatened or hurt. Officers are trained to handle abuse cases and have procedures they must follow. Some departments have Victim Support Units.

See pages 34–44 of this book to find out what will happen if she or a neighbour calls the police.

Let her know help is available

Let your friend or family member know that she can get help and support from a counselor, and that there are programs that can help her partner stop the abusive behavior. The Directory in this book has lists of support agencies and programs.

Go with her to appointments

Your support will mean a great deal, even if it is simply accompanying your friend or relative to appointments.

Talking to doctors, police, and lawyers can be a scary experience. So can attending Court. Offer to go with her as a support person.

If she wants to leave, help her find a safe place to go

Think carefully before you offer your home. Having a woman and her children live with you can be extremely stressful.

Help your friend or relative connect with counselors at a local shelter to discuss her options before you make any decisions.

Be aware of her needs

Your friend or relative may have specific needs. She may have experienced racism or felt excluded and isolated in the past when thinking about getting help. This may make her reluctant to turn to particular organizations or people for support.

Read pages 16-28 to see if any of the information applies to your friend or family member. You may be able to help her find support from someone who understands her special needs.

Do's and don'ts when offering support

You can help your friend or family member and her partner learn about what supports are available to them. You can listen and support both of them. You can give them information about abuse and what is considered criminal behavior.

At the same time, you cannot make decisions for them. You cannot assume you know better than they do what is best for them. You may think you know what is best for your friend or family member, her partner, and the children. However, it is up to your friend or family member to decide for themselves what they want to do.

Don't blame your friend or family member for her partner's choice to abuse. Even if she has made poor choices in the relationship, she is not responsible for her partner's choices.

You can encourage your friend or family to take responsibility for her own choices, but not her partner's choices. Many women say that their friends or relatives offered practical support that helped them, but being blamed for their partners' choices made them feel worse.

Don't say, "I told you so." Resist the urge to say, "I knew this would happen." No one wants to hear that, and it isn't helpful.

Don't make judgmental statements. Many women say that they didn't tell someone about the abuse because they heard statements such as, "I think some women like being controlled by a strong man," or, "No man would ever get away with abusing me!"

Do take care of yourself. Be aware that your friend or relative's abuse may trigger memories of your own. If this happens, you should consider helping her find support from someone else.

Do find a support person for yourself. Find someone you can talk to about your own feelings, but be careful not to betray your friend or relative's confidences.

Sometimes the abusive person will feel threatened by your conversations with the person experiencing the abuse. In these situations, it can be helpful to reach out to the abusive partner to find out how they might be supported as well. Often a woman will know whether or not it is safe to reach out to support her abusive partner. Many women want this person to have support even if they are no longer together in a relationship.

Call the police if you are being threatened in any way.
